When to Switch Commercial Printers

by Colleen Davis

Article published on November 26th 2011 | Advertising

As a regular commercial printing customer, there may come a time that you will realize that you are no longer as happy with the commercial printing company you chose as before. As creatures of habit, people will usually disregard this twinge of doubt, and would nevertheless continue on ordering prints from the same company over and over again. However, this feeling may be a simple sign that your present commercial printing company will no longer make the cut for you and that it is time for you to switch commercial printers. If you want to find out how to tell when to switch commercial printers, read on.

Consistently Poor Service. This one is a no-brainer. If you have been consistently receiving lacking or downright poor service, then it is a wonder that you have held on to that specific commercial printer for as long as you have. In these kinds of situations, it is not hard to guess what you should do immediately, and that is to start looking for a better commercial printing company that would be more worth your money. This is probably the most obvious sign that you shouldnâ€™t stick with your commercial printer any longer.

Non-expertise. You may have initially gone to a commercial printing company because it is particularly skillful in a specifi type of printing technique or printing product, but your preferences and needs may change over time. If you find that your first commercial printing company does not have the skill, the experience, or the equipment to properly make your desired prints, then it is probably time to find a better, more experienced printer.

Repetitive Designs. When you have been ordering prints countless of times through the years you may suddenly reach a point that you realize that you have already tried practically every design that the commercial printing company is able to offer. No matter how good a commercial printer is, there is always a possibility that their products will become repetitive and ultimately, boring. Think of it like ice cream; it may taste delicious after the first few scoops, but eat enough and youâ€™ll be wanting to try another dessert soon.

Less Effective Prints. This may be a sign that is harder to tell than the others, but if you find that the prints you are ordering from your commercial printer are raking in fewer and fewer customers, perhaps itâ€™s time to move on. It may be that the commercial printing company does not have enough experience to tell what kind of prints are most effective, or it could be that people have grown tired from the products of this particular commercial printer. The bottom line is, if the prints they produce arenâ€™t effective in doing what they are supposed to do, they are nothing but a waste of money.

In the end, choosing whether to stay or to leave a particular commercial printer will be determined by what kind of commercial printing services you need. It will be ultimately up to the customer whether or not a particular commercial printing company still meets up to expectations and requirements. Commercial printing companies are not established equal, and sometimes the grass really is greener on the other side.
