Create Your Own Comic Book by Mark D

Article published on December 15th 2011 | Art

Comic book creation is a great literary form to explore. Unlike simple sketches or drawings, comic books have a certain kind of entertainment value and also has great story telling qualities. Creating comic books can help one find a great creative avenue to release emotions or even release stress. Of course for one to create comic books, he or she should learn how to draw comic books correctly.

The first thing to do is create a drawing style that would be used to represent all elements and characters in your comic book. This is largely dependent on the theme of your comic book, serious themes require more serious illustrations while lighter and more humorous themes can workout with cartoon like and whimsical illustrations.

Developing your own style of illustrating elements is essential in learning how to draw comic books. It will take some time for you to develop a style and you will soon be comfortable on the process of bringing your imaginary characters into a drawing sheet. Do not rush into things as it may block your creativity. If you have DVR facility at your home like the one offered by Verizon FiOS TV then record your favorite comic shows aired on cartoon channels. Watch it closely quite often to understand the sketches.

There are some basic rules that a budding comic book illustrator should learn. These basic elements will ensure the proper creation of the comic book and will establish foundations for a beginner to build his or her comic book creation skills on. These basic elements are very important prerequisites in learning how to draw comic books and should be paid proper attention to.

Story boarding is an important element in comic books. It is a rough flow chart of your story and how you are planning to tell it through your comic books. Story boards are rough sketches that show how the story progresses from start to finish; it helps guide you in making different scenes. This is more like a typical project plan that you will prepare to get started with a new business.

The next step is to create scenes. Paneling is the process of creating scenes that are called panels which will be distributed across the pages. These panels will contain the entire collection of your artwork and text materials. It is very important for one to know how to properly allocate the pages because you should allocate larger panels for more important or lengthy scenes to avoid unnecessary confusions during the integration process. Certain types of effects are needed to highlight some panels. Usually effects are exaggerations that draw a readerâ€™s attention to certain elements. Some most used effects are zooming in and out, or making the elements flow out of pages.

Dialogue bubbles are the balloons that contain text materials which show what your characters are saying or thinking. It is important to balance the amount of dialogue in a page so that it is not taking up so much space. There are other techniques that come after these basics but are a bit more advanced. Techniques such as coloring and inking can be reserved for more intermediate projects when an artist has already learned how to draw comic books significantly. There are even more techniques that individuals will learn as they progress with their works but the most basic ones should be established before proceeding to the next stage of drawing a full length comic book.

Learning how to draw comic books can give an individual a great creative hobby and at some point even a lucrative part-time business. Though an artist has fun while doing the work and never forgets to enjoy what he or she is doing, if the pursuit is for profit then it should be delivered professionally.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/art-articles/create-your-own-comic-book.htm - Article Side

Mark D - About Author:
Mark loves expressing his ideas by writing or blogging. He loves watching informative videos and funny cartoon on his television powered by a Verizon FiOS TV.

Article Keywords:
create comic books, draw comic, Verizon FiOS TV

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!