Buy More Save More Program in IBC by Customer Service Center

Article published on June 28th 2012 | Auto

Saw this one on the homepage bulletin when I logged to my account in the website IBC Japan. Itâ€™s called the Buy More Save More Program and from what I understand, itâ€™s sort of a system they devised to appoint credit points for their buyers. So when you â€œbuy moreâ€• vehicles, you â€œsave mo earning credits.

Buy More IBC Japan

I made a quick browse through their table of points and basically, theyâ€™ve categorized buyers according to the frequency of purchase, i.e. number of vehicles bought per month. The credit amount is pegged at USD 40 per vehicle so if say, you buy more than 50 units, you should be able to enjoy up to USD 10,000 of credit or more. Not bad.

According to the site, the credit amount earned can be used as cash for future purchases. Itâ€™s nice to know that in this reward program, they donâ€™t differentiate between cars from inventory and those bought from auction so I guess the Buy More Save More program applies to all of IBCâ€™s stocks. The credit amount earned though will only last until one year after the close of the month they are last earned.

Plus, itâ€™s good that they put a Buy More Save More credit report on the homepage each and every time you log in. That way you get an updated count on how many credits youâ€™ve earned and also on the Buy More main page, you can see a credit history that lists all your credits earned and whether youâ€™ve redeemed those credits.

There are loads of other conditions but, overall, this might be really advantageous for auto dealers. The systems awards those with frequent purchases so I guess itâ€™s gonna be really useful for customers who either buy in bulk or buy regularly.
