Article Side

A brief guide to reclaimed building materials by Julia Roger

Article published on December 2nd 2011 | Home Improvement

If you are undertaking minor of major home improvements and are working on a budget then you will probably be very interested in reclaimed building materials. Items if this kind are often cheaper than their modern counterparts and many proponents would argue that they are superior in quality and style too. With that in mind here is an introduction to reclaimed building materials:

Reclaimed building materials come in a wide variety of forms. From red bricks to wooden roofing trusses and floorboards, pretty much everything you will find integrated into a housing construction can be recycled and put to use elsewhere. In many older properties a lot of these items have increased in desirability as modern materials are not as aesthetically pleasing, well made or affordable.

As the old saying goes, â€˜they donâ€™t make them like they used toâ€™. Ask any tradesmen and they w probably tell you that things like the original floorboards in Edwardian homes are unrivalled by modern alternatives. After all in certain buildings these original features are protected by listed building status which is testament to their quality and importance as part of our heritage. Consequently there is a market for items which are taken from certain properties if they are being knocked down or gutted for a major refurbishment.

Reclaimed building materials in the form of structural beams or studded partitions can be rescued. Other wooden items include timber flooring. However things like tiles and even windows can be salvaged and sold. Furniture is also popular as many older items were beautifully handcrafted by artisan carpenters and boast considerable style, not to mention durability. Anything from oak dining room tables to bespoke chests of draws can be acquired. Many reclaimed building materials are used for gardens and landscaping projects including masonry such as Yorkstone.

Where can I get hold of the very best reclaimed building materials?

If you are currently in the market for reclaimed building materials then you can do much worse than check out Timberreclamation.co.uk. Whether you are after timber flooring or bespoke furniture you should get into contact with the renowned reclaimed building materials firm.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/home-improvement-articles/a-brief-guide-to-reclaimed-building-materials.htm - Article Side

Julia Roger - About Author:
a Reclaimed building materials have to be in perfect working order and be fully operational if they are to be of any use at all. Timberreclamation.co.uk has the most solid and hard wearing a timber flooring

Article Keywords:
Reclaimed building materials,timber flooring

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!