Are you interested in selling your used panties because you think that it it will be simple? Wear them, put them in a bag, and get paid for them? Although this seems to be easy, there is more to it then a lot of girls starting up their business don't realize. There are so many different factors to begin with in selling your used panties, and if you want to do it well there are even more.

The actual amount of time you will spend will vary greatly according to how you sell your dirty panties. For example, auctions, blogging on a public site, or setting up your own website. Auction sites will take you the least amount of time. Especially if they are specifically catered to the panty fetish. Most are pre-templated and you donâ€™t have much control over the presentation of the auction. Although, this is a great way for you to learn the business when youâ€™re first starting out. Blogging is another good way to start out if your a little more tech savvy. Blogging allows you to kinda set up your own auction. Although there is a bit more work that goes into it, you get to personalize everything a bit more. Personalization in this business is key. They buyer wants to feel connected to you. They want to not only fantasize but feel the fantasy and connection as well. Starting your own site is defiantly time consuming and can be expensive. There are a lot of variables to consider as well. The hardest part is playing by everyoneâ€™s rules. You need to make sure every thing your doing accepts adult sites. That means hosting, payment gateways, advertising, everything!

Also, you are going to have set aside time to answer e-mails from a wide variety of peopleâ€¦with a variety of intentions. Some actual buyers enjoy longer conversations, and others donâ€™t, but what ends up happening after things catch on is that you build relationships. Those require attention and thought to maintain. You have to make sure you are keeping your buyers happy. Whether its emailing them or sending a photo for free or what have you, there is a lot of competition out there.

Another time consuming process is pictures. Are you going to be taking them yourself or have someone else do it? Do you have a proper camera (not a cell phone picture!) and lighting? The most important thing on your â€œsiteâ€• is going to be the photos. Thatâ€™s what your selling panties you worn, so are you going to be in the photos or just a picture of the panties? There are a lot of different opinions when it comes to pictures. Do whatever you feel comfortable with. The buyers will know instantly if youâ€™re uncomfortable.

Timing the orders can be another issue. Some people want orders that have been worn for more than a day and the person right after wants them worn for only a day. Its all about time management. If you are taking special requests (which most sellers do) then its all about communication with the buyers! Tell them you have an extended wear for whatever amount of time so, it will take a little extra time to get theirs. Almost all buyers will be just fine with that as long as you communicate with them. Its all about respect in this business!

There is so many factors in selling used panties that many girls donâ€™t realize when they are starting out. Most sellers really enjoy the fetish and you really shouldnâ€™t get into it if you donâ€™t enjoy it. Trust me the buyers will know! So have fun and good luck!
