Millions of sweets have come and gone over the years and have been marketed to us in just about every form from various chocolate bars to unusual candies to bags of sherbert. However while many of these are much of a muchness, some stood out as being particularly classic or particularly interesting and some even have a 'cult' following of sorts. Here we will look at some of the best types of sweet and confectionery and what makes them special. It's not an exhaustive list, and it's in no particular order, but hopefully it will give you some ideas for later...

Bounty: Bounties are a combination of chocolate and coconut which is an inspired choice enabling them to be really sweet and great comfort food without making you feel stodgy or like you've eaten too much. And because coconut is like a fruit, you can even convince yourself it's almost healthy...

Flying Saucers: Flying saucers are legendary when it comes to sweet shops. Basically they're made of edible paper which contains sherbert, meaning that they dissolve and dance on your tongue while meanwhile the round shape and small size means they perfectly fit on the back of your tongue.

Sour Bombs: Sour bombs are something that everyone loves and everyone hates. At first they're just sour and unpleasant, but for some reason after a minute you end up wanting one again. And it's always fun to see the looks on the faces of young kids trying them for the first time.

Willy Wonka Bars: Willy Wonka Bars are highly unusual in the way that they seem to snap and crackle in your mouth. This is something that at first seems like a terrible idea, but after a minute you realize it adds something new to the chocolate and once again it's oddly addictive. And you certainly can't criticise its originality.

Malteasers: Malteasers are brilliantly light and this means you can enjoy a bag without feeling guilty for the rest of the day. At the same time their lightness and unusual form means you can enjoy them in a number of ways. We all have a way of eating them, whether you scrape off a little of the chocolate with your teeth first, suck the chocolate off until the middle dissolves, or just crunch them a few at a time.

Bourn Bourns: Bourn Bourns are the biscuits that everyone in their right mind prefers. They're made of two dry chocolate biscuits with some moist chocolate icing in the middle to hold them together, and they are absolutely sublime when dipped in hot tea.

Gummy Bears: Gummy Bears will be around forever. Sure they're basically pure sugar and they look not all like bears, but they're also satisfyingly chewy and almost thirst quenching and if you're feeling a bit weird they can be swallowed whole...

Gobstoppers: Gobstoppers are one of the classic sweets which you imagine when you think about a classic sweet shop, and they're also a favorite among parents for the way they keep their children quiet...
