Article published on December 28th 2011 | Success

Leadership emerges from a fostering change that is a never ending process. The manner and approach of directing, implementing ideas and motivating a group of people indentifies a good leadership. Exceptional leadership qualities include being honest and confident about self strengths and leading others to create an environment in which the team is actively involved in the entire process. It is a process of influencing a group to achieve a common goal from the shared experiences, external pressure and internal need to break free from conventional methods.

Conventional leadership is about being in-charge and managing people, and making strategic decisions. Leadership theories have been continuously molded to develop from a closed format to an open format. There is a transition to the facilitating mode of influencing the team to follow a leader rather than dictating or making decisions for people that might lead to crisis. New age theories have come far from the conventional leadership traits, though some feel that not much has changed from the basic concepts underlying leadership. The universal truth of leadership style to turn people to become great and beneficial leaders is still the same.

Leadership is no more just based on power or the power to dominate people. Instead it is the focus to stay on track and keep the team on track by involving the team with work responsibilities while being mindful of everyone's interests, goals, and strengths. Leadership is a group process and that the members of the group exemplify certain qualities and values like shared knowledge, interpersonal competencies and technical skills that contribute to the effective functioning. This style of leadership is the new development; where in a group of people come together, make an actionable plan and commit to making things happen. It reflects the new ways of leading a group by building a foundation and understanding the nature of employees, their perception about the organization, all of which provides new insights on how to move people into effective action.

Collective leadership is what happens when a large group of people come together and commit to making big things happen and this theory helps to encourage contribution of people who are involved in the decision making process. Collaborative group effort creates a less competitive environment and the air is filled with less disagreement, criticism, and controversies as people work with empathy and cohesively towards a common goal with the ultimate call taken by the leader.

Being a freelance corporate trainer, passionate about devising path-breaking theories, with frequent business trips to many new places and cities is quite an enthralling experience. At the same time I'm constantly triggered with the problem of the safety of my property as these trips sometimes tend to be for weeks. A word of advice from a friend enraged interest in securing my house with gadgets like light sensors and alarm systems. After a little research on security services, I settled down for a monitored alarm system like the one provided by ADT Home Security.

Home alarm monitoring means protection for your home and family day and night when you're away. With the help of these integrated monitoring systems you can make sure your home office data and priced valuable possessions are safe and you'll be able to pursue your passions like my quest for constant research on emerging techniques of leadership, and you can be devoid of worries. There are many different understandings of leadership that includes ground-breaking, innovative techniques cultivating the proper leadership traits. Today, tailored leadership programs that focus on strategic thinking and organizational development are much needed for more productive action. A path-breaking leadership action is more in-demand with growing expectations and collective leadership can be regarded as a recent development in leadership traits.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/success-articles/conventional-and-new-age-leadership-attributes.htm - Article Side

Treeves - About Author:
Tina is a freelance trainer and is on the constant move facilitating corporate training across the globe while her worries, chiefly those involving security issues of her home office are safe with the use of security management systems like a ADT Home Security.

Article Keywords:
adt home security, security systems, leadership

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!