Children often do not tend to do the things that their parents ask them to do. The entire blame cannot be put on them because they learn what they observe at their home and school. Children mostly copy their parentsâ€™ and teachersâ€™ attitude. Therefore, when the children are very small, parents should always make it a point to behave in a well-mannered way so as to make their children well behaved.

Aggression can be called as a psychological injury in the form a spoken or physical attack. The signs of aggressiveness are impetuous, short-tempered, highly immatured and have easily getting frustrated. Parents should try to give their child a stable and safe home life with complete discipline and guidance of full time. It also enables you to control aggressive behavior towards them. Parents should always try to keep their child happy, but keeping the children happy does not mean that all the time they have to fulfill their childâ€™s demands.

If parents seek for ways that may help them to keep their kids happy, then they can opt for many. When children feels encouraged and get importance from others, then they become more likely to listen and learn everything that they are taught by their parents and teachers. In fact, it is much useful to positively strengthen preferred behaviors and to teach the children all the alternative behaviors to a certain extent than just saying, â€œStop it or else you will get a thrash.â€• Parental performances that are connected with violent activities of children consist of:

1.Poor management

2.Insensitive or unpredictable discipline

3.Parental dissonance

4.Negative response to the child

5.Low involvement with the activities of the child

6.Lack of support and strengthening of well-mannered or kind behavior towards the child, combined with providing proper attention and support to the children when they scream or throw a tantrum.

Small children get frustrated easily by the huge gap between the things they want to do and what they are made to do by their parents and teachers.
