Useful Tips on Finding the Right Moving Company by Cody

Article published on March 19th 2012 | Home Improvement

Moving gives you the opportunity to sell or throw away all the items in your household that are not so important. You may sell all the out-of-use old furnitures and get a substantial money from it. Or you may give away your old clothes to poor people and be proud that you have done a bit of charity. Nevertheless, at the end of it all, you will be amazed to know that nearly half the items were just occupying some extra space in your home.

Though moving is a conscientious task, you can get rid of half the tension by choosing the right moving company. This is one of the important pre-moving planning steps as well. Whether your move is going to be within a circle of hundred miles (short distance moving) or whether it is going to be Interstate or long distance, you get to find the right mover to ease out the hassles of the painstaking task. First, you may gather a bit of information from your friends or neighbors if they had got satisfactory services from any moving company. After getting the names of reliable moving companies, be sure to get the quotes from at least 3-5 companies rather than just sticking to one. Note that the process of finding the right movers is not as easy as it may sound. Sometimes, it may even take you a weekâ€™s time to figure out the right moving company. However, if you have chosen the right mover, then you will notice at the end that the wait is worth it. The ultimate goal of taking so much time and finding the right mover is to make sure that all your things are shifted safely without any breakage or damage, is it not? The following are some important points you may consider while finding a reliable mover.

First, as mentioned earlier, get the Moving Quotes from different companies. Then, ask the movers about the truck availability and size. Moreover, enquire the companies if they are offering other services such as packaging boxes, tape, packing paper, and marking pens. Also, enquire if the mover is providing insurance claims against any loss or damage to your things.

You may ask the following questions to the moving company just to find out how dependable they are:

1) Are they members of the American Moving and Storage Association

2) How long have they been operating in this field

3) Can they give you additional contact details or references

4) Lastly, the most important, can they give you the exact plan of how they are going to carry out the moving process and what kind of backup do they have with respect to the emergency storage options?

Furthermore, let me give you some additional information that will help you get a clear picture of what to expect from the services of a moving company. Normally, the moving companies give their quotes based on the certain parameters. They consider the weight of the items, distance to be covered, and additional services like storage, packing and other things. You can get back a part of your money by returning their packing materials and things once your work is done. And most importantly, donâ€™t forget to ask them about the insurance cover for the damaged things, if there is any. Ultimately, the primary objective of finding the best mover is to make sure that all your things are shifted safely without any loss or damage. Thus, it is always good to get insurance cover for your things just to be on the safer side. I hope all the points mentioned above give you a clear picture of how to approach a moving company and how to opt for the right one!
