Aside from the general perspective of locksmiths, which is generally looked upon as someone who changes the locks on your home or business, locksmiths also provide mobile services for which ever occasion, whether it be an emergency where you are locked out of your car, or you locked yourself out of your home and you need a key to be made; they will drive to you. Mobile locksmiths, as you would expect any kind of mobile service, manage/cover an area of work, usually known as their territory, or field of range. Generally when an order is placed for a locksmith technician, it is done at a main office, and from there the dispatcher chooses the appropriate locksmith who covers the area in which the call came from, and lets them know they have a call for a job. Mobile locksmiths generally make an attempt to reach the job site as quickly as possible, so that they are able to evaluate the hardware and tools they will need for the job, as well as the procedures that need to be implemented, depending on what type of work the customer would like done, all of this done in a timely matter as part of providing quality customer service. As well know, when it comes to a service industry all kind of jobs can take different amounts of time, so it is important that the professionals know their job in and out.

Something that should be noted as well, that backs up the dedication a locksmith has for their work, they themselves invest money out of their own pocket in order to perform the majority of the jobs they service, reason being is that in order to provide the most accurate price quote, the locksmith first must see what parts he needs in order to complete the job. This is done simply because different customers have different types of systems they want implemented for their home/business/automobile, more specifically a type of lock. At times a technician will not have the equipment a client wants, so the technician needs to be able to factor in the cost of materials in the final estimate, and in order to do so he needs to know exactly what he is going to spend.

The majority of the time mobile locksmiths are extremely busy professionals. They generally do their best to estimate an approximate time frame on how long a job would take, based on the information the customer gives, before they arrive on site. The technicians need to have a strong understanding of how long certain job takes due to having so many appointments throughout the day. Generally the longer a job will take, the higher the price will be, since it will be cutting into the time that the locksmith has to service other clients throughout the day. Depending on the services needed, generally a locksmith will be able to provide you with a flat rate quote before they begin working, and the only way that the quote would change is if there were some sort of unforeseen problems, or materials throughout the job. The purpose of this is to give the customer a piece of mind, as well as providing great customer services.
