Challenge Your Driving Skills with Mini Cooper by Mark Hussay

Article published on December 5th 2011 | Auto

Whenever I see a Mini cooper on the streets no matter whatâ€™s going on in my mind, I just stop and just breathe in the aura of the whole car. As these cars are still rarely found in the US streets so this time when I saw this car I just exactly knew what I should do next. I just knew that I should learn more about this car.

So what I gathered was that this car was specially designed and built to accept and complete a challenge. The story goes like this that in 1957 there was this Suez Canal crisis that was happening and due to that the fuel costs just went soaring high. When this incident took place the leaders who owned the Morris Car Company challenged their engineers and the production teams to come up with a car that would fit exactly the specific needs of every customer. The car had to be a small, fuel efficient and it should be able to carry four adults and anyone could afford it.

The version of Mini cooper showcased a real revolution of sorts in its basic design. The engine was most of the times turned sideways so as to fit the small size of the engine. To ensure that adults could easily ride inside the car the wheels were eventually pushed towards the outside edge of the body. Earlier people were skeptical but by 1961 the car became very popular with the British drivers.

From the very beginning people have been in awe of the all new range of Mini copper, mini parts and the used mini versions. People could easily associate themselves with mini cooper and its parts and they would associate it with adventure and fun. Time and again people have associated the experience of driving a mini cooper with that of go karting experience. The rolls bars are also installed inside the car in the center console so that means not just the speed but the interiors too match the whole experience of karting.

The latest models of the mini cooper will offer various varieties of spats and fenders that would be available in contrasting colors and it would be quite similar to that of the mini versions. The mini parts and the used mini also have the feeling of that real car and even they are available in great quality. This car offers the rear support pillars that are hidden behind the windows and it would also help in maintaining the carâ€™s four star safety rating as well as the looks. So it would be personally suggested that just go for this version whether you can buy the car or buy the used car this car just cannot be ignored.
