Factors to Consider when Choosing a Compact SUV by Erwin Calverley

Article published on April 18th 2012 | Auto

Compact sports utility vehicles (SUV) are a great deal for people who want the safety of a large vehicle and the convenience of a mid-size van. An SUV can be as large as a full-size van but provides enough space for few passengers. Its off-road capability makes it a good mode of transport on about any terrains. If you are thinking of getting a compact SUV, there are several factors to be considered before you purchase one.

Some compact SUVs may appear large from the outside but some models doesnâ€™t have enough room for luggage. If you plan to fit in six adventure-seeking, camping-loving people inside your automobile, choose an SUV that have sufficient space for storing your equipment.

If you love off-road driving, choose a compact SUV with four-wheel drive. This feature allows you to drive on natural terrains, like rocks, sand, and mud safely and comfortably. Take note of models that have front- or rear-wheel drivetrain, which limits their off-road capabilities. However, remember that a compact SUV with four-wheel drive consumes more fuel and requires more thorough maintenance.

SUVs may have a bad reputation of having tendencies to skid and rollover, but this is not true for all models. Choose a compact SUV that has a solid anti-lock braking system, which allows the wheel to continue interacting on toehold with the road to prevent the wheels from locking up and skidding. The compact SUV must also have a high mileage to maintain a good fuel economy.

For a more enjoyable driving experience, choose a compact SUV with an interior layout that appeal to you. For example, check if the radio knob and vent levers are easy to reach that you donâ€™t have to take your eyes off the road. Check the car seats, the seatbelts, headrests, and other parts. A number of Ford Indianapolis dealerships include modern compact SUVs with fascinating interiors, such as the Ford Escape, on their lineup of vehicles for sale.

The price of a compact SUV sold by Ford Indianapolis IN dealers depends on the available features. Todayâ€™s models may cost between $18,000 and $26,000. Make the most out of your buck by choosing a model within your budget and that has most of the features that youâ€™ve been looking for.
