Cars have transformed from luxuries into basic necessities of everyday living. The majority of people in Canada need vehicles to facilitate everyday activities like commuting to work, running errands, picking up relatives, going on vacations, and many others. Without vehicles, traveling to different places and performing errands would be challenging tasks indeed.

Many people drive their cars on a daily basis. Thus, regular car maintenance is important to ensure that the vehicle remains in optimum driving condition. Even the most expensive car will break down and cause headaches if it receives improper care. Owners are advised to take their cars to auto mechanics at least once every 6 months for servicing. In other words, maintenance can help you improve the quality of your ride and enhance driving safety.

There are several basic car maintenance procedures that can be performed by the car owner. These measures will help the car owner avoid high service and maintenance fees. First, the owner can start by rotating the tires every 7,000 miles to increase their lifespan and prevent irregular wear and tear. Tires serve as the backbone of a vehicle as they add traction, braking, steering, and load support. Additionally, tires absorb shock to create a smoother and more comfortable driving experience.

The next important maintenance procedure is to change the car's oil regularly. The general rule of thumb for oil changes should be once every 3,000 miles. However, recent advancements in engine and oil technology have made the lifespan of car oils go beyond the sacred 3000-mile mark. It is best to follow what your car manual says regarding oil changes to avoid any complications.

Expert auto mechanics also advise car owners to have their radiator flushed and refilled once a year. Doing so removes rust and scale deposits, lubricates the water pump, removes contaminants, and protects the radiator from rust and foam—measures that help the vehicle operate more efficiently. Car repairs are important in Edmonton because residents use their cars almost every day.
