A great example is parks, monuments, and museums for most are free, and the rest are at extremely affordable costs. While they portray the energized and metropolitan look of the city at daytime, nights are mostly quiet, serene and full of tranquility with an air of romance and intimacy. Washington DC also takes pride in hosting some of the world's widespread compilation of artifacts, space, art and more while the lands also embrace vast parks like the National Mall that hold their special value making visitors witness the breeze brushing against colorful flowers and making them dance to its tunes. Not only are there areas to walk, most parks also have dedicated areas to hike, indulge in some skating or just sit down for a great family picnic!

Visiting the National Zoo is another great idea that works for free for there is no admission fee to be a spectator of 163-acre zoological park that boasts of more than 400 different species of nature, while for the more 'wild' ones of us, ice skating is another affordable activity that can be enjoyed both, outdoors and indoors. So you can either take part inside the skating rink or relax sitting outside and watch people inside them have fun.

There's everything for everyone, and all the moods of life come alive in taking Washington DC Tours, and another great aspect of the city is that you can get reasonable priced tickets at half the price of major productions happening in Washington DC through Ticket place located on 407 7th Street NW, while many smaller theaters have plays happening at minimum cost for everyone to afford and bask in the glories of live acting. Some of the favorite theatres are the Source Theatre, the Studio Theatre and the Woolly Mammoth Theatre Company.

Come summers and a plethora of free concerts hit the city in the parks for tourists and citizens to enjoy local entertainment. The Smithsonian National Museum of Natural History also hosts local jazz artists performing on Friday evenings in the cafeteria area.

For people who are interested in dancing, that Glen Echo Park hosts scheduled dance events in their Ballroom for the general public and the ticket price includes lessons for the amateurs or beginners. Washington DC sightseeing tours promise everything for everyone irrespective of them coming from affluent backgrounds or reasonable bank accounts.
