Reykjavik Airport Facilities by Lek Boonlert

Article published on November 29th 2011 | Aviation

On September 3, 1919, the first airplane took off from Reykjavik Airport. Since then, the airport has grown along with the city and acts as a hub from which the cityâ€™s expansion spreads.

Today, Reykjavik Airport represents a major national and international hub of travel for visitors to Iceland.

Many of the flights in and out of Reykjavik Airport are domestic flights from within Iceland itself. The conveniently sized, two-terminal facility offers the simplicity of transferring between flights in a small airport, but still caters to the needs and expectations of international travellers. Services within the airport include automated currency exchange, banks, information kiosks, and special areas for families with small children. Baby-changing areas and a childrenâ€™s play area make travelling with small children more convenient. Shops offer souvenirs, gifts, newspapers, magazines, and many other goods and services for travellers visiting Reykjavik Airport hotels.

Cafes and confectionaries, as well as a nice restaurant with a bar offer travellers an opportunity to refresh themselves while they wait for layovers and flights. Car rentals are available for visitors who would like to explore Reykjavik and the surrounding areas after a long flight. Business travellers will appreciate the Saga Executive Lounge, which offers business travellers a place to relax and prepare for meetings.

An impressive array of hotels offers travellers a variety of choices for sleeping arrangements. Whether you are travelling through Iceland for business or pleasure, Reykjavik Airport and the surrounding hotels offer every service the international traveller could possibly need.
