Keeping Your Baby Warm from Top to Bottom by Rob Colbourn

Article published on January 20th 2012 | Babies

We love our precious newborn baby and know he or she must be kept warm and free from drafts. But swaddling them in blankets can actually overheat their little body and cause problems on its own. Choosing what to put on our baby or perhaps put our baby in can be difficult to decide when there are so many options and well-meaning advice from grandparents, friends, and neighbors. Some sage advice can be found on the internet by looking on a site like Wikipedia.com. Shopping on the internet can offer some good suggestions and with good photos provided can give your ideas as to what might work best in your particular weather situation.

Popular pajamas keep little ones warm all over many babies; from newborn up to toddler stage will be best suited to those comfy warm pajamas that have been around for generations. Grandma most likely dressed your mom up in some Jamieâ€™s with the feet in them. Long sleeves and legs that include built in socks or footie's keep baby warm and snug plus they look so cute bundled up in them! Toddlers will not slip when walking about in sleepers that have built in feet because they are made to be non-slip and this works especially well if you have wood or tile floors. Sleeper pajamas come sized from newborn to about school age and many youngsters prefer them to other night wear like gowns or two piece pajamas because theyâ€™re all in one and easy to climb in and out of. Of course you can find short sleeved and short legged style pajamas that work well in the warmer months when baby needs less covering.

Sleeping bags and sleep suits sized to fit all Some of the popular sleeping bags designed for infants and older babies come in one or two sizes only and are designated â€œone size fits allâ€• so beware of that sizing when you are buying. If itâ€™s meant for a newborn to a six month old it may well work best for the baby who is three to six months of age and that will depend on the size of your particular baby. Not all newborns are the same size. Some may be five to six pounds at birth while others may be more like eight or ten! If you have a larger sized baby you may want to consider the next bigger size.

Warm and snug garments keep baby cozy all day and night When shopping for a wardrobe for your new baby consider the material those baby clothing are made from. You will want soft materials that do not scratch or abrade babyâ€™s tender skin. One of the best materials to come along for infantâ€™s children and adults is made from bamboo. Yes that very versatile plant continues to provide many uses. Bamboo undergoes various processes to make it soft and resilient and the end result is cloud like softness that washes easily and wears extremely well. Terry cloth is another popular material for baby clothing and it is very affordable as well. Whatever you dress your infant in will show off how much you care and how much he or she is loved!

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/babies-articles/keeping-your-baby-warm-from-top-to-bottom.htm - Article Side

Rob Colbourn - About Author:
a Bamboo Baby offers a full range of organic baby clothes to retail customers, and also a range of a wholesale baby clothes.

Article Keywords:

Bamboo Baby, wholesale baby clothes

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!