The strong military deterrence provided by the tiny nation of Israel is of the utmost importance in pursuing peace in the Middle East. Thus far it has been only preventative because Israel has not been allowed to unleash the might of its military arsenal against its enemies. At some point, however, the line of demarcation will be crossed and Israel will be forced to do what its allies do not seem to have the courage to do. Remember Iraqâ€™s Osirik nuclear reactor? If the U.S. fails to stand behind Israelâ€™s attempts to free the world from Iranâ€™s implied threats of nuclear attacks, the results be catastrophic. v

On the other hand, if the U.S. stiffens its resolve to be the true leader of the Western world and takes its place as such, the threat from Iran will be averted and the countries now seeking democracy and a better way of life will not be held hostage by the religious radicals who wish to control not only the Middle East but the world.

An Islamic radical drives a Suburban loaded with explosives into the early morning drop-off line at a school in Denver. In Chicago, another fanatical Muslim drives a gasoline truck into the Chicago Board of Trade building. Death and destruction rain down. Terrorists crash small, explosive-laden airplanes into the airport in Atlanta, destroying two jumbo jets and the main terminal. All flights are grounded. A nuclear bomb is exploded high above Washington, D.C. The entire East Coast power grid collapses. Everything is at a standstill. Darkness blankets the eastern seaboard. From Maine to Georgia, the power grid is in shambles, destroyed by the pulse of a high-altitude nuclear detonation. Cities and towns of every size are on the verge of chaos.

Only the military continues to function, frantically searching the seas for two container ships bearing nuclear missiles poised for a second strike that will destroy what remains of America.

The President is convinced the attacks are the work of Al-Qa'ida operatives aided by elements within the Pakistani government. David Hoag knows the truth about who is really behind the attacks, but powerful forces in high places are bent on unleashing America's military might and Israel is poised for a response of its own.

Can Hoag reach the President in time to avert a worldwide disaster?

Or, is this the beginning of the end?
