A Chartered Surveyor needs to be fully qualified by Mary Porter

Article published on June 15th 2012 | Business

Are you looking for a chartered surveyor?

If you are buying a property then you will certainly need the services of a chartered surveyor. Buying a home is probably the most significant purchase you will ever make and it is amazing that some people do not take the time to conduct a proper survey before parting with their money. If you use a really well qualified chartered surveyor to inspect your home before you buy it and compile a report then you will be well armed. Many small and not so small problems may be highlighted and this can serve to give you extra bargaining power when agreeing a final price.

What should I expect from a chartered surveyor?

A good chartered surveyor will undertake a detailed inspection of the property you are about to buy and will give you advice on what, if any, remedial action needs to be taken on the property before you move in. However, some people require the services of a chartered surveyor merely in order to give a reliable valuation on the property. This service is most suitable if a mortgage is not required on the property. Also, if a property is relatively new, there is less likely to be any remedial works so you may find that a valuation survey will suffice.

Where is the best place to find a good chartered surveyor?

There are many organisations who can provide a chartered surveyor but, in terms of finding the best chartered surveyor, one name really stands out from the crowd. Surveyline Chartered Surveyors have been established since 2000 and they have a network of firms with specialist knowledge of surveying throughout the property market. If you are in the process of making the huge investment to buy your own home then you really need to make sure that you know all of the pitfalls that there may be. Why not give them a call today or, alternatively, visit them online at www.surveyline.com where you can find out more about the services they offer.
