A Cursory Glance at EB-5 Foreign Investor Program by Abhinav

Article published on December 27th 2011 | Business

During the past few years or so, recession has been a major reason behind global slowdown, falling share market, unemployment, inflation, decrease in the real income, slowdown in economic growth, and slump in consumer spending. Every country is looking for counter strategies that could nullify or negate the consequences of recession.

Some of the wealthy countries, such as the US are also seeking ways to maintain safer environment to live and invest their money. EB-5 US Foreign Investor Program is one such strategy adopted by the nation in question that repudiates the effects of the recession.

The USCIS established EB-5 Program in 1991 whose main purpose was to attract foreign nationals who had the desire to invest in the country and seek new business opportunities. After obtaining the approval from the USCIS, this program provides conditional Green Card to the applicants. The applicants can arrive in the country after this and apply for Permanent Residency in the following five years.
