Road traffic accident claim potential

In the UK every road user owes a duty of care to other road users not to drive their vehicle negligently. If you've been involved in a road traffic accident where another driver has breached his or her duty of care to you and that action has resulted in your suffering injuries, you may be entitled to bring a traffic accident claim against the other driver. You might be a pedestrian, a cyclist, motor cyclist or another car driver on the road.

By law all drivers must have at least third party insurance cover. This means that their insurers will pick up the bill if the driver causes an accident and injury to any other party (including any passengers, whether related to the driver or not). If you are unfortunate enough to be involved in an accident with an uninsured driver, or with a driver who doesn't stop after the accident, then your claim is likely to be covered by a special agreement covered by the Motor Insurers' Bureau an organisation set up specifically to cover such incidents.

Who should be considering making a claim?

If the accident claim in manchester was not your fault and you have been injured then you should consider making an accident claim.

If the other driver is responsible for the accident and you can prove that his negligence caused your injuries, you will be able to recover compensation for the pain and suffering caused by your injuries, loss of certain enjoyments in life as a result of your injuries, for example if you are no longer able to play with your children or play sport.

What can you claim as a result of the road traffic accident?

You may also claim any wages you already lost and will lose in the future because of your injury; and any expenses you incurred as a result of your injury such as traveling to the doctor, medication charges, equipment you need to use as a result of your injuries, and similar future expenses and the cost or value of care you had to have and will need in the future because of your injury.

However in the unfortunate event that your case is unsuccessful, you do not pay anything towards our charges and disbursements.
