Ask any seasoned thespian and in all probability they will tell you that no production would be worth seeing without at least some primitive form of stage lighting. Using the correct tools for the job, whether that is simply allowing the actors to be seen during a performance or to create an optical illusion or special effects, is absolutely vital in staging a successful production. In other words stage lighting is about as important as actors and a script...

Stage lighting is an integral component in the theatre industry which is invested in regularly by many venues as well as production companies. Indeed at any given performance you should be able to see things like large lanterns at the back of a theatre. Spotlights are also very popular forms of stage lighting which are used regularly. There are also several special versions which are specifically designed to create special effects. For instance a gobo “ derived from either go-between or go before optics “ is a template which is placed in front of a light to control the shape of the light which is emitted. These days moving lights and special LED stage lighting are used in conjunction with pyrotechnics and sound recordings to make live performances truly memorable.

The importance of good stage lighting should not be underestimated because it plays a pivotal part in creating a believable and realistic performance. Things such as moonlight can be simulated using the right equipment to create a convincing rendering of a classic scene. Many amateur as well as professional actors will swear by the efficacy of stage lighting. Indeed it is as vital as the likes of special effects gear and props.

If you are currently on the lookout for top notch stage lighting then you should make the effort to seek out a supplier which stocks a comprehensive range of products at reasonable prices. One company which has a reputation for providing a wide range of high quality stage lighting solutions as well as special effects equipment and other great theatrical accessories can be found by taking a look at the website Backstagewarehouse.co.uk.
