Estate Buying Guide: Things to Inspect in a Condo Unit before Buying by Rebecca Stratton

Article published on July 6th 2012 | Business

After spending years of renting, you™ve realized that it™s much more convenient to have a place of your own. Right now, there™s no better real estate purchase than a condo unit. Shopping for a condo is just like shopping for a home, and both require the same thorough type of inspection. Here are a few things you need to examine for quality control:

Design and Layout

Typically, the first thing you™re going to inspect in the condo is its design and layout, particularly when it comes to the flooring, doors, rooms, and windows. You must carefully assess if the layout suits your taste and lifestyle. It might be that you would need to install a whole lot of other furnishings or remodel the space so that it will look the way you want it to.

Noise Quality

You probably already know that most condominiums are situated in urban areas which garner a lot of noise pollution, including traffic and construction noise. If you™ve been living in the city for a long time, it probably won™t bother you. But if you find it affects your quality of life, then look for another building that™s a little more secluded and quiet.

Security and Privacy

Since condo units are constructed closely together, you might want to check for prying eyes and nosy neighbors. You should also make sure that the condo has competent security. There should be a security personnel constantly checking the building and conducting rounds to protect against crimes and crooks. Additionally, the parking space, and the whole building in general, must be well lit especially at night.

Emergency Protocol

Even though you already have the ideal condo in mind, if the building doesn™t observe emergency protocols, then your life would be at stake and you™re better off living elsewhere. Make sure that the emergency stairs, elevators, and security systems of your preferred Jackson Hole condos are present and working properly as part of the overall condo insurance.

Water or Plumbing Damage

Another thing you shouldn™t forget to inspect is the quality of water supply, and if there are any plumbing or pipe damages you need to repair. The last thing you need is a plumbing emergency in the dead of the night. Fortunately, Jackson Hole condos have excellent plumbing systems.

HVAC (Heating, Ventilation and Air Conditioning) Systems

Just like regular Jackson Hole homes, the condo should have a complete set of properly working HVAC systems. You can add additional pieces of décor and furniture in the space if you are aiming for total comfort and convenience.
