Outdoor lighting provides a swanky look to its surroundings, besides making it bubbly. Depending on the nature and purpose of use, these lamps are available in a large multitude of shapes, sizes and designs. It is up to the users to decide on a particular type of lamp depending on individual preference and requirements.

Next talking of the places where these are commonly used, it finds widespread use in the exteriors. , commercial spaces and real estate properties, parks, gardens, water bodies and public places. Apart from providing adequate lighting, these are also meant to serve the much required purpose of ensuring proper safety and security measures during the night time.

The modern day security and surveillance systems have also been making full use of outdoor lantern lighting. Detection of intrusions have become a lot easier and to make it even comfortable for the security managers, modern day tracking systems have been developed that can work simultaneously with the lamps.

These find large applications in the commercial sectors as well, especially near shops, hotels, restaurants, malls and other such places that witness a steady footfall of hundreds of people every day. In addition to this, having proper arrangements of outdoor lantern lighting are a necessity in the roads and highways as well without which vehicles will practically find it impossible to track each otherâ€™s movement during the night.

These lights are powered either electrically or through solar power. The electrically powered ones are the more expensive of the two and consume a fair deal of electricity. On the contrary, the solar powered lamps are much cheaper and get charged from the sun rays. However, in terms of intensity the electrically powered lights are much more bright and intense compared to their solar counterparts.
