Picking the right type of Windsock by Mary Porter

Article published on June 23rd 2012 | Business

Think a windsock is just a device thatâ€™s used to show wind direction at airports? Industrial types of Windsock are, thereâ€™s no mistaking that fact, but fun versions are also available from a kite shop and they can add a little colour and cheer in a variety of locations.

A funky Windsock is the perfect accompaniment for a camping trip, pick a pitch, erect a pole and let your windsock flutter in the breeze. The Windsock looks fabulous fluttering from the top of a caravan and itâ€™s a brilliant feature to add to your motorhome. It looks great in gardens, itâ€™s perfect the beach and a Windsock is great for festivals too. Hereâ€™s what you need to know about a windsock if you are considering buying one in the future.

Design

Shop for a windsock at a kite shop and youâ€™ll be overwhelmed by choice. Unlike commercial windsocks that take on conical designs a funky Windsock is a totally different prospect. Choose dragon style products or sheep shaped items youâ€™ll find a Windsock that looks just like a pig, fish style goods and designs that mimic birds in flight. Pick and choose from numerous themes youâ€™ll have tons of fun in the process.

Size

The larger types of Windsock can measure anywhere upwards of 6ft and theyâ€™re particularly impressive if you buy a 3D option. Obviously the bigger the Windsock is the more itâ€™s going to cost and thatâ€™s something to think about when you are making a purchase. Consider the size of the Windsock, bigger isnâ€™t always better if you have a budget to stick to.

Fixings

The secure way to fix a windsock is to buy a telescopic pole from a kite shop and fit it over a ground stake. The poles vary in height from 3m to 20m super poles it all depends on how high you want to display your Windsock. Make sure you buy a pole that has a fibreglass final section for the Windsock though they tend to be more durable.

Take your time choosing a Windsock and itâ€™ll provide you with plenty of pleasure in the future fluttering happily in the breeze.
