Article published on February 8th 2012 | Business

A recreational vehicle is a moving home that can be used for camping and vacations. This is used by two groups of people - full timers, who spend their entire time in it and by workampers, who work and travel around in their RVs.

This is one vehicle that has everything from a bed, kitchen, TV to bathing facility.

Serving multi-purposes, it should be maintained well for it to last long.

To start with the most important precaution would be to have a fifth wheel cover. Without the cover, your vehicle would be exposed to all sun and rain. It would have adverse impact on the vehicle and even a minor defect caused might turn disastrous in long run. However, you need to be careful while choosing a cover as the specifications might be different for each model and safe side would be measure it physically. Always go for larger cover than a tight-fitting one. Ensure correct measurement of the bumpers and tiers. While checking the height of fifth wheel cover, better measure it with the air conditioner and without it..

One more thing that you need to be wary about while using the fifth wheel cover is the manner in which you cover the roof. Climbing on top of the roof is not recommended and the best way to do it will be to make use of a stepladder. Just make sure that the antennas, mirrors; AC units are not poking out, as this may lead to wear and tear of the fifth wheel cover. Covering up the RV in a proper manner adds more years to it. By spending just 10 minutes covering the vehicle with fifth wheel cover you do ensure longevity of the vehicle.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/business-articles/saving-rv-with-fifth-wheel-cover.htm - Article Side

Chris Adam - About Author:
For more information on a fifth wheel cover, check out the info available online; these will help you learn to find the a 5th wheel cover!

Article Keywords: fifth wheel cover, 5th wheel cover

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!