Article published on July 2nd 2012 | Career

To get actual benefits of surfboards for beginners, it is recommended that you choose surf boards that have more buoyancy. It is length of a board that determines level of buoyancy. It aids beginners in mastering art of surfing in ocean waves and improve their level of confidence.

Before you decide to use long surfboards for beginners, using fun boards will be better. Because it is wide, this is the best way you can acclimatize with shapes, dimensions and weight of a board before opting for long board. Long boards allow you to undertake long practice sessions in standing up position. It gives you some idea regarding manner you ought to balance your body. When you use thinner boards, standing exactly in center of a board is desirable.

Paddling to standing, this journey in beginner surfboards can at times be very frustrating. With some extra effort, you can make this transition very enjoyable. Inexperienced surfers often make mistake of paddling very quickly. As a result, they are more prone to getting tired very soon. Keeping spare energy with you will allow you to try again and again.

Short beginner surfboards are preferred because of extra maneuverability it offers. Surfers often pit their wits to attain perfect balance. The thrills and sounds make surfing very satisfying for beginners. They find long boards very useful for catching waves and transition from standing upright to paddling. However, only bottleneck these long boards suffer from is lack of easy maneuverability and slow speed. On the other hand, short boards allow you easier and faster turn when you are in motion. The only drawback it contains is your inability to stand for extended periods because availability of less surface area does not permit you for this. Experts feel it is long boards that perfectly suit any beginner.
