According to the Bureau of Labor's Occupational Outlook Handbook, accounting should be an area of growth in the job market. With an associate degree in accounting, Miami residents can expect to earn a good livelihood in the profession. As the economy recovers, more businesses will need to increase their employee pool in this important area.

If you are seeking a position that will allow you to grow professionally, accounting is an excellent choice. Businesses need accountants to update and maintain financial records, keep track of expenditures and accounts receivable, post debits and credits, and prepare financial reports. This field is much in demand in southern Florida, and is expected to grow.

In small businesses, the accounting clerk is often responsible for creating and maintaining a general ledger that shows all transactions of the company. If they earn an associate degree in accounting, Miami job seekers can apply for these positions. The efficient and reliable accounting clerk is vital to the healthy growth of a business, so this person is a respected member of the team. Job security follows demonstrated competence and work ethic.

Larger companies may offer a person with an accounting associate degree the opportunity to specialize within the field. Accountants may work in accounts payable or accounts receivable. More advanced clerks may provide auditing services for work that has been completed. If they hold an associate degree in accounting, Miami residents can successfully compete for these jobs.

An accountant may work for a proprietorship, a partnership or a corporation. During the first year of study for an associate degree in accounting, Miami students learn about the entire accounting cycle. Students develop an understanding of accounting methods and business management. The second year is generally spent on hands-on experience with computer accounting programs, cost accounting, and dealing with incomplete account records.

Thorough preparation in a qualified school is important when seeking an entry-level accounting position. Important considerations when choosing a school are the number of students in the program who went on to work successfully in the field; the particular instruction available; and the cost of attending the program. A good way to assess the school's performance is to visit the placement office and speak with a counselor before enrolling in a particular program of study.

Once education is completed, most individuals will want to take certification tests in order to demonstrate their skills and competencies for prospective employers. Certification can help individuals advance in their careers and prove they are a valuable member of the management team. Research shows that certified professionals demonstrate greater competence and are more highly regarded by employers and colleagues.

Choose the school carefully, and ensure that you have adequate financial aid to complete the program but do not borrow more than you need. Seek certification to nail down the particular qualifications the employer is seeking. Work with the school's placement office to sharpen up your resume and job-seeking skills. Get ready for a great future.

By earning an associate degree in accounting, Miami residents can increase their earning potential and their appeal to prospective employers. The confidence of knowing you have the skills and expertise to secure an entry-level position and then advance in the field will boost your ability to find and perform the job you want.
