BPO represents Business process outsourcing. In this a third party is taken into contract to perform specialized processes on the behalf of a company. Outsourcing is the most basic form and is used from outside. This is a practice used by large companies on a larger scale.

Business process outsourcing is found to be truly beneficial as it is able to focus the primary purpose. The two types of BPO are front office and back office outsourcing. The back office processes include billing, payroll, logistics and human resources. In fact, the collections, job recruitment and analysis are also done as outsourcing by many companies.

Many processes such as claims processing are also now being outsourced and the front office outsourcing includes customer service, advertising, technical support and marketing. Foreign call centers are the most reviled BPOs having most companies touted in offering customer service. Outsourcing customer service saves the company lots of money, besides improving the bottom line.

Business processing is now widely accepted as it is the only means to reduce costs, improve productivity and foster innovation. The BPO strategies span various traditional and non-traditional activities. The BPO providers deploy class systems and expertise to integrate cross-functional activities of business processes.

Business Process Outsourcing services include processes from functions of specialized banking to transportation reservation systems. The workflow support is customized and strong appearing in variety of industries.

Companies utilize BPO owing to cost considerations and also many times because they have less expertise to handle certain business aspects. On the other hand, there are many companies also criticizing using BPO, especially the call centers that assist in cutting costs.

Many western countries use countries such as India to offer services at excellent price and this is owing to the fact that they have well educated pool of labor, low cost of living and high unemployment rates.

BPO focus in providing customized outsourcing services and they save money and time. The main goal is to offer affordable services and quality oriented turnaround time. Nowadays BPO services are available to multiple industries like legal, health care, large and small businesses, government and non-government organizations and financial industries.
