Those staying in cheap Rome hotels might be looking for a way to explore the city on a low budget and taking one of the tours might give you a chance to take in some of the major sights without breaking the bank. Tours are also a good starting point if you are unsure what to do first, so you can get your bearings and make a few plans for the rest of your stay.

There is a walking tour of the Vatican Museums, which will also include the Sistine Chapel and St Peterâ€™s. These tours are for small groups and are led by an experienced guide. Your place on a tour can be booked in advance so that you can avoid disappointment. This tour can give you a glimpse of the extensive art collections held by the Vatican in over 2000 rooms that cover a distance of more than nine miles.

There is a half-day walking tour of the Coliseum and other ancient parts of the city. These are also for small groups and have limited numbers, but they allow you to skip the queues that build at these monuments. This takes around three hours and is usually a morning tour. The guide will provide details on the history of each monument and answer any questions that you might have.

There are many other tours available, some of which might take you to locations outside the city, but whichever you choose, you will see and learn a great deal.
