explore new things. The only problem that Archie faced was his elder brother and sister teased him a lot. They used to pull his legs on small issues and Archie also acted restlessly on their action. Even his peers also tried to tease him so that he could become angry and started running after them. Archie turned out to be a clown to his brother, sister and his peers. One day, his siblings teased him and when Archie chased them, they went to their mother.

Though it was completely their fault that they teased Archie, but the poor 8 year old boy got punishment from his mother as he got mad out of anger. That night, Archie gave a deep thought to the matter and found that if he could control his anger, he won't become a clown to others. So next day when his brother and sister started teasing him, he kept the smile in his face. After pulling his legs for some time they realized that Archie had controlled his anger and thus they stopped doing this. Since then, Archie learned that when we control our anger, it couldn't control us.

Anger is among the six moral weaknesses that can destroy the life beauty of a person. A person can commit severe mistake out of anger. So in an early childhood, kids should be taught to manage their anger. Sometime it's been noticed that children develop behavioral problem due to unhealthy environment in home. Domestic violence between parents causes severe psychological problems to kids. If a child gets angry very often, parents need to tell them that it is not something unusual. Every one of us gets angry, but we should know how to control it. There are some ways by which we can teach our kids to control their annoyance.

These are briefly discussed below:-

A healthy bond with your child can help the child to manage the annoyance. Kids' annoyance can be taken as a way of venting out their inner conflicts. When they develop a sound relation with their parents, they feel free to speak to them without showing any anger.

When kids become angry, parents should not try to stop them then and there. This may create a whole mess and can spark the matter. Talking to them later on about the thing can be a good way of teaching them anger management.

Encourage your children to recognize when they are angry, starting with the toddler. Be an attentive listener, helping your child work through feelings.

Children respond with anger because they feel helpless. To understand why one child becomes angrier than other children takes some time and effort. So parents should give more time to their kids so that a better understanding between the two generation can be build up Teaching your child to manage anger and talk about feelings can prevent many angry outbursts in teenage years ahead, in their adult relationships, and in their own relationships with their children.
