Palatka Florida Students Consider Welding School by William Hauselberg

Article published on March 7th 2012 | Education

Palatka is a small city located in north-central Florida. It is the county seat of Putnam County. Putnam County is a rural county and one of the poorer counties in the entire state of Florida. The quiet, country lifestyle is preferred by most of its residents, but for the younger generation, there are very limited opportunities in the immediate area.

Many high school graduates may have trouble finding jobs that pay much more than the minimum wage. To try to escape a future of living from paycheck to paycheck, some of those young graduates opt to attend a traditional college or join the army or another branch of the military.

For those that do not choose the military, many go away to traditional colleges in other areas of the state or country. Not everyone is cut out for 4 years of learning in a traditional college setting. For those that are still ambitious but who don't want to sit behind a desk all day, choosing a Palatka trade school is a very viable alternative.

Skilled Trade Alternative

One of the fields that a young man or woman can choose to pursue is a career as a welder. Welders are in high demand and salaries begin at about $35,000 per year. The city of Palatka is only about 25 miles south of Jacksonville and the Mayport Naval Base. Jacksonville is also a major east coast port city that serves the shipping industry.

If you go to a Palatka postsecondary school and learn the skills required to be a welder, you can look for work in the Jacksonville area, or anywhere in the state or country. Building, maintaining and repairing ships requires the services of a skilled welder. As many of the more senior welders are nearing retirement age, the need for young, new welders is great.

A Palatka trade school that teach welding as well as trade schools in Jacksonville and the surrounding counties, are fertile recruiting grounds for both private companies and the government that are looking for welders. Welders also can find work in road and bridge construction, the auto industry and just about anywhere else where one piece of steel must be attached to another. Some welders, with an artistic touch, use their talents to create intricate and very unusual works of collectible art. If you are looking for a solid career in the Palatka area, why not give welding a try?
