Going to Prom with a Group by Adrion Smith

Article published on June 4th 2012 | Fashion

So youâ€™ve picked out your perfect designer prom dresses, whether they be Jovani prom dresses, or one of the many La Femme prom dresses youâ€˜ve tried on, now who do you go with? There used to be an incredible amount of pressure on prom goers as to whom their date was going to be. Who are you asking, when are you asking them, what if they say no? Nowadays, that pressure is mostly off. Plenty of people have opted to either go solo, or with a group of friends. There are numerous positives for going to prom with a group, one being it takes the romantic pressure off the night.

The group you keep determines the mood for an outing or a night, and that is no different on prom night. If you are seeing someone and already have a date lined upâ€”great! What do you do if there is just no one single person you are keen on going with? Well, what better way to enjoy one of your last high school nights than going with a group of friends? Get together with a group of your girlfriends beforehand, put the final touches on accessories for your designer prom dresses, and then head out for a wonderful night full of dancing and fun!

What if youâ€™re going with a date but would also like to go with a group of friends? Here is where it gets tricky. You and your date may have a completely different set of social circles and it may be tough to get everyone together at once. Well, after stepping out in your designer Jovani prom dresses, compromise with your dates. Be flexible as to which group you decide to go with. Even if you donâ€™t end up having dinner with your set of friends, you will still most likely see them at the dance as well as the after prom festivities.

Going to prom with a group of friends also helps rid you of any romantic pressures you may feel throughout the night. Prom is a time for light heartedness and fun, not stressing over who to take and what to do when you get there. Stepping out in one of your best La Femme prom dresses should be memorable and worthwhile and going with a random person just so you have a â€œdateâ€•, will not be as fun as going with your closest friends. So whether you have a date, or just want to hit the night with a group of friends, remember to have fun!
