Host your own event this spring by Robert Barnes

Spring sees the beginning of milder weather, and is a particularly popular time for those wishing to organise their own social events. Whether it is a charity fundraiser or a private cocktail party at a London bar, those looking to do something a little different for their friends this spring can find organising their own social event a rich and rewarding experience.

First, you need to decide why you are going to hold such an event. Are you raising money for a local charity, looking to socialise with a larger group of friends and acquaintances, or perhaps make a little bit of cash? Perhaps you are organising a stag night or hen do for a friend. All of the above events will require a slightly different planning approach; however there are a few basic guidelines and ground rules that can be applied across the board.

Organising your own social event can be a rich and rewarding experience; especially for those who enjoy a challenge with tangible results. Be sure to gather a few friends or volunteers in order to help you with the organisation and running of the event; communication is the key here, and nothing will be more beneficial to your event than a team of enthusiastic members with varied skill sets. They can help with everything from the creative aspects such as invitations and promotional posters, to the organisational necessities such as venue hire and time schedule planning.

Careful preparation of a budget will ensure that your costs do not exceed what you can afford to spend; all sponsors, expenses and incomes should be carefully drafted up and adhered to in order to maximise the success of your event. Be sure to get approval of the budget and budget sourcing from the other team members- you may be the one in charge, but it may be worth considering the insight and opinions of others. You did choose them to be your team members after all!

Whatever the type of event, you will need some form of regulating and identifying those who are partaking in the event. Wristbands are a great way to do this, and cheap wristbands are available from a large selection of online shops such as labeleyourself.com, who specialise in delivering wristbands, personalised stickers and name tags at a flat rate shipping cost of £2.95. The wristbands should be given to paying entrants and remain with them for the duration of the event.
