One bound by appropriate education, experience and dexterity can become a good accounting professional. There are many types of professionals in the field of accounts and finance, but to be able to serve the public, one needs to hold special qualifications and be recognized by the regulatory bodies.

How to Become a Qualified CA

There is a list of prerequisites and qualifications that every student needs to abide by, along with having the acumen for being a CA.

â€¢Education University

Mostly students contemplating to become Accountants study business courses. You can also study at a University and get a degree. It grants more credibility and gives you a base for studying accounting modules.

Another option is to pursue your under-graduation in a field of your choice, at the University and pursue other business courses along with it. These can be taken up part-time and they will save your time, yet deliver knowledge. Make sure that these business courses are certified degree or diploma courses that hold value.

Student profession Program

Provincial Institutes play the role of establishing and managing the process of acquiring the qualification, criteria of admission and performance standards of CAs.

Student profession programs offer many graduate level courses. The students are required to complete the Student profession program or an equivalent course.

These programs are of significance as they make sure all candidates obtain adequate acumen in the field of accounting.

â€¢ Experience

One needs vigorous training to enhance their skills and understanding of financial management. It is of utmost for candidates to gain experience before they step into the circuit of Finances. One must have experience in a CA Training Office.

Most Vancouver based Accountant Offices comprise well established corporates, government organizations and CA firms. Their training includes well experienced CAs who supervises the candidates and help them become competent CAs.

To get admission in these offices, one must directly apply or meet the right personnel when they come for recruitment.

Experience attained at the training office enables you to administer and gain knowledge about the duties which will one day, be yours!

â€¢ Assessment and Evaluation

This process of evaluating and assessing a candidate helps in determining the ability of these students. Throughout your University programs, in student professional programs and even during your job experience- One is monitored incessantly.

Also, all Canadian CAs ought to pass the UFE (Uniform Evaluation). This will determine the level of knowledge, values and skills through a continual process of evaluating, developing, assessing and judging the candidates.

Becoming a CA in Canada is a prestigious affair. It is a respectful, skilled and economically satisfying occupation.

Many foreign students wanting to become CAs need to acquire certain international credential recognition. They should have accounting degrees or professional accounting experience from trusted and well-known accounting bodies outside Canada.
