Details About Recurring Payments by James Blee

Article published on January 24th 2012 | Finance

The use of recurring payments plan is on the rise. This is one method that is primarily used to give shape to multiple transactions. As a part of the process, these transactions are processed conveniently at predetermined intervals. Of course, this is mere a representation of an agreement used for purchasing of services and products.

Under this method, a cardholder is the one who authorizes a merchant for billing. The billing is directed at hi/her credit card in regular intervals which is mostly on a monthly basis. However, the merchant keeps a provision in the agreement which clearly stipulates that the gap between two consecutive transactions can under no circumstance exceed more than a year. The mount determined for the transaction can vary or be fixed. The recurring payments plans remain effective till the time it is not mandatorily cancelled by a customer.

A lot of businesses worldwide choose processing recurring payment option mainly because of its advantages. For instance, in case of newspaper subscription, it entitles the subscriber to make payments indefinitely. Of course, the subscriber has the option to cancel it whenever he/she wishes. There is a clear cut distinction between this option and the installment payment plan. In case of latter, there is a certain fixed amount which needs to be paid. Additionally, the amount that each installment carries is a predetermined one and has to be paid continuously until the full payment is done.

The processing recurring payment plans benefit the merchants in more than one ways. For instance, it brings about a tremendous increase in customer loyalty. Similarly, customers are more than happy with this option because it means a great comfort and convenience for them which ultimately make them fully satisfied..
