Delicious Drinks from the Can Vending Machine by Maria Gini

Article published on May 26th 2012 | Food

An individual would normally associate a cold drink vending machine with delicious drinks and the can vending machine with other kinds of refreshments. The truth of the matter is that many of the popular brands do have their drinks packaged in cans. Especially the energy drinks are likelier to be dispensed from the can vending machine than a bottle dispensing cold drink vending machine. Delicious and refreshing healthy drink options like orange, apple, pineapple and mango fruit juices, together with exotic tropical, citrus and forest fruits based drinks are likely to be stocked in a cold drink vending machine.

Standard cans of coke to bottles of water, fruit juice and even fruit smoothies are often dispensed by the can vending machine. An office which needs to serve different kinds of refreshment options might prefer the kind of can vending machine from which you can dispense the heat and eat snacks and soups usually packaged in cans. However, certain things like water, sodas and cold teas are popular regardless of the season. If you need to serve them round the year you would do better to get a cold drink vending machine. A cold drink vending machine also comes with the inherent value of not being subject to more seasonal conditions because you can find universal things to store inside of them instead of beverages such as snack foods.

When you have installed either a can vending machine or a cold drink vending machine as a business then you are in clover. The startup costs are less than in other businesses, the profit margins are higher, you have greater flexibility in the time you want to devote to your business and “unless you have a machine with a credit card option” you operate all cash. It is still one of the fastest expanding markets in the world. Potentially there are substantial tax savings since you could also be allowed to have deductions based on the expenses of your business, operating your equipment and servicing it. What are you waiting for? Grab that golden opportunity!
