If you are familiar with anybody from the HR Consultancy industry ask her about the power of one and sheâ€™ll be able to tell you. HR consultancies work on the principle of providing companies with the best talent to suit the business needs of the companies. When a company comes out with a vacancy it may distribute the vacancy news and the job to a few consultancies. The HR Consultancy may work hard and send a few quality candidates for interview. As the consultant she may have coordinated the interviews and the process of short listing them. However, after all the effort and the cost incurred by the consultancy if the company finds the candidate from another consultancy a little better than the best candidate of this consultancy the company will recruit him. As a result no payment is received by this consultancy and the total effort goes to waste.

If on the other hand the consultant is able to find one most suitable candidate in terms of experience and attitude that will match with the company requirement then her job is done. Her candidate will get selected and the consultancy will receive a hefty amount as fees. So there is no place for the second in the industry is what the consultant would suggest.

At times when we go to shop we may look for variety and compare their features and prices. But after some time through the process exhaustion comes in and we want an expert to suggest the best one in term of quality and price. So when we get the best item suggested by the expert consultant is there any need for meaningless shoddy alternatives?
