Facts Regarding Keloid Scars by Simantha Williams

Article published on March 20th 2012 | Health

Before giving much detail about the keloid scar it is first of all very important to know about the keloids and the harmful effects associated with it. A keloid consists of any kind of the fibrous material on the range of the scar. Such a scar may be like that of a chicken pox scar or a scar of body piercing when it becomes rough. The keloid also varies in the size. It may be from tiny one to a large as well as an annoying one.

The keloid scar consists of a colour from red to pink. There are many problems attached to the keloid scars. The problem is that they do not happen to stop growing and they also move on that body part that is not at all being injured. The difference between the regular scars and the keloid scar is that the regular scars diminish after a period of time but the keloid scar never fade easily and they remain on the body over a long period of time.

The people having much more piercings have such kind of problem and they suffer from the keloid scars. The medical science as well does not have any clue that from where such keloid scars occur. There is no possibility to completely get rid of the keloid scars. The only way out to prevent oneself from the keloid scar is to not wound oneself.

The keloid scar make the skin look very much ugly. Even the person suffering from such a situation becomes very much depressed. But nowadays many of the scar removal technique are also available. Such techniques may be referred to as the laser scar removal technique. Much more precautionary measures are to be taken after such a treatment. For such a case the antibiotic soaps as well as ointments are to be applied or to be used on the body.

It is also one of the very important facts that the scars can never be healed completely. But some of the medications or the cosmetics can help for such a case up to some extent only. There are many kinds of the laser surgery or the steroid injections available for the removal of the scars. But in such a cases there are chances of permanent injury to the skin too. Many sorts of the herbal treatments can also be availed. Such treatments are much more beneficial than the artificial one.
