If you have noticed that your backyard deck is starting to show signs of age then you may be wondering how to refinish a deck. Although it may seem like a fairly labor intensive and costly project initially, deck refinishing does not necessarily have to cost you thousands of dollars or a great deal of time. By following a few simple steps and making the effort to regularly maintain your deck, you can ensure that it will provide years of reliable service for you and your family to enjoy.

The first step when it comes to how to refinish a deck is to clear all of the furniture and strip off any of the old finish that may be remaining. How to go about this particular step of deck refinishing will depend on the type of finish that was used initially on the wood. Most finishes can be removed by sanding, scraping or by using chemicals designed to remove old finishes. If you decide to use chemicals you should make sure that the area is well ventilated since many of these products have teams that can be quite harmful when inhaled.

Once the old finish has been removed, it is now time to choose a new product to protect the wood on your deck. This is one of the most crucial steps when it comes to how to refinish deck since the right product can make the difference between a deck that lasts for years and one that will require costly repairs in the near future. If you intend to avoid deck refinishing for as long as possible, it pays to choose the right product for your particular type of deck and climate. For example, if you live in a humid or rainy region then you will want to purchase a product that is designed to waterproof the wood.

Lastly, when it comes to how to refinish a deck, it also time to choose whether or not you want to add stain to the wood. Stain helps to protect the wood from the natural elements, but some individuals prefer a more natural look to their deck. Many stains are designed to be used in conjunction with a topcoat so you should make sure that you purchase the right products, generally from the same manufacturer. Once you have finished your deck refinishing project, you will once again be able to appreciate the beauty of properly maintained wood.
