Renting a dumpster for a specific project can speed up the process by adequately handling large amounts of waste products. Dumpsters are available for private and commercial jobs ranging from spring-cleaning to demolition and construction work. Dumpster rentals assess fees by the cubic yard and are available in 5, 10, 20, 30 and 40 cubic yard receptacles. The size of the dumpster should coincide with the amount of waste expected from the project.

It is best to arrange for delivery of the dumpster the day before the anticipated start date to ensure it is on site when the project begins. Companies that provide dumpster rentals can assist in determining the size of container an intended project needs. If there is any doubt about the size, it is better and less expensive to have one too big than one too small. The price of dumpster rental depends largely on the landfill fees in the area and the size of the dumpster needed.

Most dumpster rentals charge a flat rate for delivery, pick up and disposal of trash. A dumpster rents for a set amount of time and each size has its own weight limit. If the dumpster weighs over the specific weight limit, there is usually an extra charge for each additional ton of trash. If a dumpster is required longer than originally expected, there is an extra charge per day. Before renting a dumpster, check state, city and neighborhood regulations.

Some localities may have a size limit on dumpster rentals, while others may have a time limit and still others may have no restrictions. Regardless, examine any information pertaining to dumpster rentals prior to renting. Normal dumpster rentals do not allow toxic waste, or any products requiring special handling, such as paint, household cleaners, or electronic products placed in the dumpster. If a dumpster is required for toxic waste disposal and the dumpster company provides the service, request a dumpster specifically for that purpose.

At a customers request most companies can provide recyclable receptacles. If the project is finished early or the dumpster becomes full, call the company for pick up and waste disposal. Check several different companies that offer dumpster rentals for comparison pricing. Read the terms of the agreement thoroughly to avoid misunderstandings. The agreement reflects the initial charge as well as any additional costs if the dumpster is overweight or needed for a longer length of time.
