Carpentry: More than What Meets the Eye by Linda Wise

Article published on May 23rd 2012 | Home Improvement

From Biblical figures like Noah, historical men like Matthew Banckes, to a more contemporary celebrity like Harrison Ford, carpenters have proven to hold one of the worldâ€™s oldest and lasting professions. The demand for skilled handymen and experts in woodworking isnâ€™t known to decline even in the face of recession. The number of homes and structures in need of these experienced individuals are at a constant.

When you hear the word â€œcarpenter,â€• you probably envision a man holding a hammer and wearing overalls with several pockets. What you may not know is the amount of education and strict standards carpenters must qualify for to be considered as professionals, especially in Canada. In average, a would-be carpenter in Canada needs a minimum of four years and a certain number of hours of on-the-job training and technical instruction. After that, they have to spend additional hours to review and pass an examination that will allow them to be licensed and legally operate anywhere in Canada. If thereâ€™s one more thing you must know about carpenters, itâ€™s that they fall in several categories. Here are some types of carpenters you might find interesting:

Cabinet Maker

It is said that a general carpenter who becomes a cabinet maker is like a doctor who becomes a surgeon. Cabinet makers specialize in fine woodworks that involve creating intricate designs and building furniture such as cabinets, storage chests, and wardrobes. They usually work inside their shops and deliver finished products to the customer.

Green Carpenter

Because thereâ€™s an increased awareness in the importance of eco-friendly homes and building materials, a specific carpenter Vancouver homeowners can hire to construct their energy-efficient homes are those that employ â€œgreen carpentry.â€• Green carpenters utilize renewable resources, prioritize environmental practices like using energy-saving tools, and find greener alternatives to traditional construction materials. For example, they can recommend installing cellulose insulation rather than asbestos, which takes hundreds of years to decompose.

Scenic Carpenter

A scenic carpenter practices carpentry Vancouver movie and theater lovers rarely notice. Yes, a professional carpenter is behind those sets and stage elements that improve the overall scene in a show. Scenic carpenters incorporate skills in woodworking and welding to create the set pieces according to the technical drawings supplied by designers or directors.

Finish Carpenter

Finish carpenters are also known as a trim carpenter or joiner. A finish carpenter Vancouver residents rely on can perform a wide range of services which include making trim and moldings, staircases, and custom furniture. They supply â€œfinishing touchesâ€• on both the interior and exterior of your house. If you want to read more about other kinds of carpenters, you can visit articlesbase.com.
