If your gardens need a "makeover" to make it look wider and clearer yet more colorful, you need landscaping services to help you get exactly what you need. While landscaping involves the extensive planting of new shrubs, grass, or trees in selected areas in your yard, this should be done carefully to prevent a crowded look. What you would want is to make your surroundings look fresh and welcoming.

You should start the planning process by measuring the space. This can help your landscaper determine how to make the most of your space as well as select the most suitable types of plants and flowers. This also helps determine the style and theme of the landscape that would work best with your building or house.

Designing your driveway is part of the landscaping process. Whether you like your driveway curved or straight is up to you, but this can also depend on what is good for the space. For example, if you live in an apartment building, a curved driveway leading to the parking area can make the place look more spacious, and it makes traffic more fluid.

The same goes for walkways; curved walkways through a garden give the illusion of length and space. The curves also create spaces for shrubs, small trees, or even vegetable patches or playgrounds, if your space allows it. Walkways may consist of a simple concrete path, or one made of bricks, stones, or hopping stones.

If your space allows it, water forms or irrigation systems can keep your grass and plants fresh and teeming with life. Children would be delighted with a fish pond or small artificial falls with its relaxing rush of water. Chicago landscaping architects can help you manage this project and help you create a good irrigation system.

Chicago landscape design involves the careful selection of plants and shrubs. Many popular species for landscaping are potentially invasive species that somehow "escape" the premises. When choosing these plants—particularly tropical or subtropical species with no natural predators or competitors—you may need to hire a skilled gardener to keep them under control. Fortunately, some local plant species may be quickly subdued.

The landscapers Chicago homeowners hire would be happy to help you select an overall theme for the landscape design. Minimalist modernist styles with Asian influences have been popular lately. However, if you prefer something grander, like having a small forest or a topiary maze, you may discuss that with your landscaper. For more information, see LandscapingIdeasOnline.com.
