Deck Cleaning: the Best Way to Maintain Your Deck by Elias Boyer

Article published on May 18th 2012 | Home Improvement

Many times, you may have used your deck to celebrate an important event such as your birthday or to simply provide a warm welcome to your new neighbors. It must have been an exhilarating experience preparing all those utensils in those nicely set tables, all under the comfortable expanse of your own deck. Indeed, you might have thought that your deck, sturdy as it may seem, will withstand just about anything. But have you ever thought that it might also need some maintenance?

Just like any other part of the house, decks need to be maintained. Since they spend all their time getting exposed to heat and getting drenched in rain, they need to be checked for damage once in a while. For most people, a general cleaning is usually due on spring or autumn. However, more frequent cleaning may be required if your deck is a high traffic area and if the weather in your place is particularly humid.

Since the materials used for deck construction usually come from organic sources, they are still subject to decay. To prolong the life and durability of wood, deck cleaning is recommended at least annually. To improve the shelf of life of wood, manufacturers these days have begun to introduce treated hardwood.

Hardwood is produced by exposing the wood to a certain amount of pressure. Pressure-treated wood is long-lasting and can withstand both humid and frosty weather. Still, even with the use of treated hardwood, decks can still face lots of problems as they still contain organic components that are prone to decay or oxidation.

One common problem your deck might encounter is the loss of an even surface, a result of the wear and tear caused by the shoes and furniture that have constantly grazed the surface of the wood. For this reason, consider having a deck cleaning Charlotte NC residents prefer for your home's deck. The wood's original surface texture can be efficiently restored via this method.

Heavy rainfall and high humidity also damage the decking of many houses in the southern states of the US. High moisture content damages wood by penetrating its pores and by subsequently softening and degrading the fibers that make up the wood. Due to this, the kind of deck cleaning Joplin MO residents opt for involves the use products that seal the wood's pores.

If you feel that your deck needs some maintenance or a little refurbishing, this might be a good time to know more about the best products for deck cleaning Topeka KS residents and those from other areas choose for their homes. With proper planning and product selection, you can keep your deck in good condition.
