To guarantee improved security and energy efficiency, old, dilapidated windows in every home would need to be changed with newer ones. Replacement windows are installed onto existing window frames to give superior insulation and ventilation. As there are numerous forms of windows, homeowners have different types of replacement window options available to them. Here are some fundamental styles of replacement windows worth analyzing.

One of the highly prominent window replacement selections is the bow window. As its name indicates, it is bent like a bow and provides a broad panorama of the outside. This type of window was offered into the United States by British settlers in the eighteenth century. Installing bow windows in your property delivers a variety of advantages, among which is the capacity to make a room seem sunnier, loftier, and more elegant. Furthermore, bay windows give extra light and air flow, providing a steady source of fresh air.

Next, another trendy style of replacement window is the jalousie window, also referred to as the louver window. If you take a closer look at these windows, you will discover that they are made of glass boards which are placed as panels within metal clips. These glass slat panels are turned like shutters by hand to open and close. This shutter feature of jalousie windows enables property owners to regulate the air flow in their residences.

The patio window is another option for replacement windows Northern Virginia residents love. Patio windows are available in different styles, designs and sizes, but are generally floor-to-ceiling windows that allow the outside in, so to speak. The perfect option of patio windows all hinges on the taste of each household owner and the style and structural demands of a home.

commonly considered as an option for window replacement Northern Virginia residents also prefer, the arched window is not your typical, everyday window. Arched windows are frequently installed into homes to provide some complexity and sophistication to the architecture. Prior to having arched windows or any kind of window replacement set up onto your home for that case, it would be ideal to consult a specialist first to find out its suitability.

Finally, examine the hopper window. This style of window is a bottom hung casement window. Several styles of hopper windows Northern Virginia homes have tilt open at the top and come with crank handles to hold them in place against the breeze.
