More Floor has the finest engineered oak flooring by Mary Porter

Article published on June 25th 2012 | Home Improvement

Are you considering renovating and redecorating your home? Have you decided that by laying carpets you are tempting fate and almost inviting spillages? If this sounds all too familiar then the Engineered oak flooring that More Floor can offer is sure to appeal.

Our engineered oak flooring products are manufactured exclusively in Europe. This engineered oak flooring is manufactured exclusively in Europe and are made from natural wood in two qualities, and in many different sizes, including the very unique size of twenty eight centimetres.

Another principal advantage of our engineered oak flooring is that the solid oak is extremely hard wearing and made from one solid piece of wood in the whole section. The floor boards are tongue and groove designed on all four sides, which allows the elements to be fitted together easily.

Typically our engineered oak flooring is twenty millimetres thick and has a bevelling construction in length. For those customers of engineered oak flooring who have not left enough space for laying solid floors and, or perhaps would like to use under floor heating, or if the humidity of the room is too high the engineered oak flooring that we offer is paramount.

As a customer-focussed business our business provides a full service from floor production of engineered oak flooring to on-site laying and surface finish. This ensures that you will be happy with the work that we complete on your behalf for years to come. We offer a full guarantee that the engineered oak flooring that we offer is of the highest calibre.

Finally, we are presently offering a discount of five percent for anyone that purchases engineered oak flooring throughout February. However, it should be noted that this discount is only applicable on orders of over fifty metres squared, though it is certainly an incentive if youâ€™re intending on renovating the living areas of your home.

Should you like to find out any more information about our solid oak flooring, or indeed to browse through our product selection then you need only come and visit us online at: www.morefloor.co.uk.
