If youâ€™re thinking of buying a double memory foam mattresses, you should weigh up all the information before making your decision. We can give you all the facts and science that you need but ultimately, the main point to remember is that memory foam mattresses are the most comfortable and supportive style of mattress on the market today.

Here is a very brief history of memory foam: In the mid 1960â€™s it was developed as part of NASAâ€™s space programme and its original intention was to keep astronauts comfortable on long space flights. When the space programme was eventually wound down, the potential of memory foam was too good to ignore and after the first mattresses were trialled in hospitals in the 1980â€™s, domestic mattresses were put on sale some ten years later.

Memory foam mattresses today are immensely comfortable and that is down to the unique design. Essentially, as soon as you lay down on your mattress, the upper layers of foam start to mould around your body, memorising its shape until you have a bespoke surface that is as unique as you are.

This is where you experience supreme comfort but all the time this is happening, the lower layers stay completely solid, giving you total support. This is why memory foam mattresses are useful for back sufferers because they offer the best support possible. Your doctor would therefore completely back you in your decision to buy a double memory foam mattresses.

There are other healths benefits too as memory foam is completely hypo allergenic which means, amongst many other things, that it will be completely resistant to dust mites. In addition, the absence of springs in the mattress design is another useful safety feature too and it will make your new memory foam mattress much easier to transport and put into place.

These days, if youâ€™re looking to buy a double memory foam mattresses you have two options: You can either look in the physical world at high street and retail park bed stores or you can look online for a specialist retailer.
