Article published on March 23rd 2012 | Home Security

Bodyguards, also known as close protection officers, are professionals who protect people from loss of confidential information, and physical threats like assassination, assault, harassment, kidnapping, and stalking. These highly trained security personnel are generally employed by high profile public figures like politicians, movie stars, professional athletes, and other celebrities.

The primary responsibility of bodyguards who work for security services new york is assessing security threats and providing the necessary security measures. However, contrary to popular belief, the role of a bodyguard can be very complex. For instance, bodyguards employed by multi-agent units may have to perform varied tasks like communication protection, analysis and assessment of risk, threat, and vulnerability, detection of chemicals and explosives, operation of different security measures, as well as mob screening and control. They may also be required to search areas for possible threats, and prepare travel routes.

Agencies that recruit bodyguards look for candidates who are physically fit, have experience with firearms, and know self-defense techniques. Employment opportunities are often advertised in newspapers and job portals on the Internet. One can also directly approach security services new york for suitable job openings.

Bodyguards can advance their careers by choosing to specialize in certain areas. For instance, with further training, bodyguards can become protection specialists who are hired to protect clients in both unarmed and armed situations, and also keep a control over the situation until proper authorities can arrive at the spot. In recent years, internet security training has also become popular because of the increasing rate of cyber crime.

High-profile individuals rely on professional bodyguards for their security and protection. These executive personal protection bodyguards work 24/7 protecting their clients from any potential dangers. Bodyguards usually work 6-hour shifts on a rotation basis. The job profile calls for a significant amount of traveling. Irregular hours are also not unusual. However, the work schedules generally depend on the bodyguardâ€™s employer or agency.

Persons wishing to become bodyguards need to have at least a high school education. A military background or knowledge of law enforcement procedures is preferable. Prior to becoming a professional bodyguard, candidates must undergo rigorous training. These programs teach students about first aid, armed and unarmed combat techniques, as well as firearms tactics. Some courses also focus on martial arts training. There are a number of colleges and universities in the United States that offer courses in this field.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/home-security-articles/what-executive-personal-protection-bodyguards-do.htm - Article Side

Carolmoore - About Author:
Curiosity to know more about a security services new york or a executive personal protection?

Article Keywords:

security services new york , executive personal protection

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!