Each one of us has had an opportunity to live in a hotel at least once in our lives. Some hotel experiences we remember throughout our lives while some of them we just forget as soon as we return to our homes. Ever wondered what makes a hotel experience special? There are a few things that really affect how one's hotel experience is going to be. Certain things make for a pleasant experience while certain factors totally take the pleasure away from the visitors of hotels. Let's discuss some factors affecting hotel experience for people one by one-

First and foremost, a hotel must look warm and welcoming. The décor of a hotel has to be such that it exudes warmth and class. The colors used in the hotel have to be subtle and classy. Bold colors and shocking combinations are not a very good idea when it comes to hotel interiors. The mere reason behind this is the fact that not everyone likes bold colors while subtle colors are liked and preferred by everyone.

Along with the interiors of a hotel, the hotel exteriors should also look classy and swanky enough to attract the tourists and guests. The building style is not the only thing that would dictate the look of a hotel; rather, the hotel must have green lawns and bright lighting gracing its entrance areas.

Moving on, a hotel must look clean and tidy at the very first sight. There should be no spot of dirt on the floors. The reception and lounge areas must be extremely posh-looking and tidy. Cleanliness has to be a norm when it comes to hotels. It is not just the floors that have to be clean but the common restrooms in hotel areas have to be extremely tidy. The commercial restrooms, hotel restrooms, restaurant toilet cubicles have to be extremely hygienic to please the guests.

Adding to the cleanliness factor, it must be noted that the hotel needs to be organized in its working and in its appeal. A good and organized staff would leave a positive impact on the guests. Organization has to extend to hotel interiors and architecture in general too. The rooms have to be well-organized and clutter-free. Restroom dividers are a great option for hotel restrooms that make the restroom spaces more organized and visually appealing. Also, these restroom areas have to smell extremely good to make sure that the guests find the areas pleasing instead of feeling repulsed by them.
