Understanding Leased Line services by Peter D

Article published on June 7th 2012 | Internet

When it comes down to selecting an effective communication platform, there are several options that businesses have. Among them selecting a Leased Line connection is said to be among the best. This dedicated connection helps businesses in a great way and immensely helps them in achieving their ultimate goals. So let us understand what exactly is this service?

Leased Lines are fixed cables that offer an enterprise with an exceptional speed and steadiness. However this dedicated service does come along with hefty price tag. So it is rightly said that a business must first evaluate its need and then only select this service. These dedicated lines are said to be at its best when they are used to connect multiple branches of an organization. By taking this service a business can easily communicate within its branches, without having to worry about any connectivity issues. It also becomes easier for employees of an organization to stay connected with everyone and share files over the network.

One of the biggest benefits of this connection is that it can not only be configured to carry voice or data signals, but can also be used to provide dedicated internet services. As these lines are always active they are not subjected to any kind of downtime. Unlike other Internet connections available in the market, an Internet Leased Line is purely dedicated to a single user and is not shared among several users. These are designed to offer stable and consistent speeds to the end-user. The speed of this dedicated line does not get affected when used by multiple users at the same time. It is said to be most beneficial for businesses that have a strong online presence and need quick accessibility to Internet.

Any Internet Service Provider that offers this service usually signs a Service Level Agreement with the user. This agreement guarantees the user with a dedicated level of service and bandwidth. Leased Lines usually require an enterprise to sign the agreement for a minimum of one year. Any business, be it medium or large, can opt for this connection; however it is generally considered unsuitable for small businesses that are uncertain about their operations.

If you look at long term goals, this service turns out to be a great investment that can help businesses stay ahead of their competition. So if you are also mulling to take this service, it is very important for you to make an assessment of your requirements.
