Pearls are the most magnificent gemstones in the world because they come in so many different shapes, colors, sizes and types. Just considering the way pearls are grown, the true miracle of pearls can be seen just by looking at them.

Currently, the majority of pearls are cultured using effective farming techniques that have been perfected over time. Freshwater pearls are the most common type of pearl. The reason for this is because these pearls can be mass-produced. Each Freshwater oyster can produce around 20 pearls each time it is harvested. Freshwater pearls, though mainly grown in white, pink, gray, and lavender, can be enhanced to any color imaginable.

Freshwater oysters are easily nucleated (the process of placing an irritant into the oyster to grow a pearl), thereby making them easy to manufacture. Freshwater pearls create beautiful accessories that are unlike any other pieces seen, due to the fact that they come in so many unusual types. Akoya pearls are unique because they come in small round shapes and very few colors. Naturally these pearls come in white but are generally enhanced to dark colors like black and blue. Occasionally these pearls are also created in an emerald color. Akoya pearls are nucleated differently than other types of pearls because a perfectly round nucleus is inserted into the oyster. This fact allows pearls to be seamless in shape each time they are harvested.

These types of pearls make wonderful strand necklaces that offer a classic look to any ensemble. Tahitian pearls are distinctive because they are some of the worldâ€™s largest pearls but also because of the special colors they come in. These pearls start growing at around 8mm and grow to sizes around 18mm, compared to Freshwater which start around 4mm and end growing at 14mm.

Tahitian pearls though they are considered â€œblackâ€• actually come in colors like purple, green, blue, gray, and esteemed peacock. Tahitian pearls are ideal for creating stud earrings and outstanding rings. South Sea pearls are also large in size like Tahitian pearls and their exclusive colors make them one of the most rare pearls in the world. Shades of gold, silver, and creamy white make these pearls stand out as they are set on beautiful pendants and rings.
